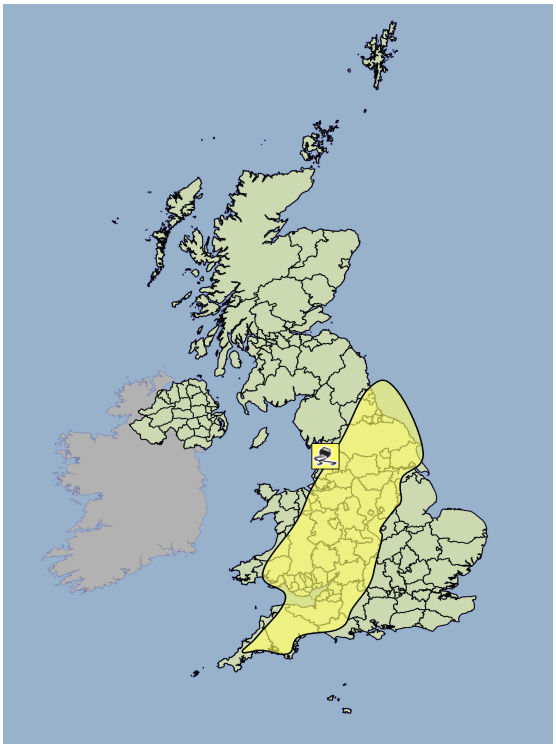
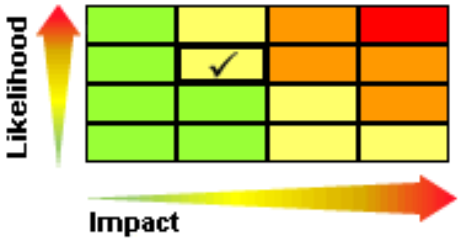
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A frontal system will produce a good deal of rain through Wednesday afternoon and evening, with some snow over the hills, chiefly in Wales, the north Midlands and northern England, which may give a covering in places. Surfaces will remain wet into the night, such that as the temperature falls below freezing, ice is likely to form on untreated roads and pavements. Upland areas in the north and west of the Warning area are at risk during Wednesday evening with other areas at increasing risk later in the night and at first on Thursday morning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 20:00 on Wed, 17th Feb 2016 until 10:00 on Thu, 18th Feb 2016

Rain and some hill snow will clear from the west during the course of Wednesday evening, with the cloud thinning to allow the temperature to fall below freezing overnight and at first on Thursday morning. Please be aware of the risk of ice on untreated surfaces.
